"I know it gets better."

Amira is a very smart toddler. She knows her name, her parents' names, and how to count. In less than nine months, she'll become an older sister.

Her mom, Brooklyn, is eight weeks pregnant. She has just had her first doctor's appointment and was told she has a high-risk pregnancy. Though she needs to be extra careful during her pregnancy, she isn't getting the nutrients an expecting mother should get.

Money has been very tight for the family and sometimes they don't have food at home. That means her family has to skip meals.

Though her husband works as a painter seven days a week and rarely takes a day off, what he earns goes mostly towards paying their rent and bills. Any other expenses make it tough for the family to make it through the month.

After moving into an apartment and having problems with their electricity, their energy bill skyrocketed and the family began to fall behind on payments.

Even after being set up on a payment plan, the family has only been able to make partial payments and they fear their electricity will be cut off any day.

"Our electricity bill, they were threatening to cut it off. We didn't know what to do. We just told them to cut it off and then we'd pay it later and Amira can go stay across at her grandma's house," Brooklyn said. "I'm just scared of splitting up our family. That's something that I don't ever want to have to think about."

Their situation took a turn for the worse when the family's only car started to break down. They had to choose between paying for the bills they were behind on, food and fixing their car.

Repairing their only means of transportation took priority over everything else. Without a car, her husband wouldn't be able to go to work, they wouldn't be able to go to the store to buy food and Brooklyn wouldn't be able to go to her approaching doctor's appointment.

Even fixing their car was a challenge. Though they would save some money by having her husband fix the car, they didn't have a way to get to the auto salvage yard to buy used parts.

When Brooklyn's mom found out they didn't have a way to get to the salvage yard and that they weren't eating, she didn't hesitate to travel more than 700 miles round trip from Lubbock to Austin to help them out.

She took her daughter grocery shopping and surprised Brooklyn's husband when they arrived home with food.

"I didn't tell him. I just told him we were going to the store and we would be right back," Brooklyn said. "When we came back he was hugging her and thanking her. He was all crying."

With the help from her mom, the family had a bit of food to hold them over for a while and Brooklyn's husband was able to borrow her car to go to the salvage yard.

"He pulled some parts off an older car and he put them on our car so that I could get [to my appointment]," Brooklyn said. "We don't know if those parts will last, but they got me here and they'll get me home."

Having to spend money they didn't have to fix their car took a toll on the family budget. Though Brooklyn was grateful for all the help she received from her family that allowed her to get to her doctor's appointment, food was still scarce at home.

After finishing her first check-up and finding out about her high-risk pregnancy, Brooklyn received positive news as she was leaving. A clinic staff member directed her to a Food Bank meal site where she could get a meal for free.

A much needed meal for her and Amira.

Brooklyn walked into a cheerful room where she was handed two hot meals that had been made fresh in the Food Bank's community kitchen.

"I fought tooth and nail just to get to this appointment today and then they surprise us with this. It helps a lot," Brooklyn said.

They were able to eat a nutritious, balanced meal that included noodles mixed with ground beef, spinach, corn, and milk. Brooklyn couldn't help but tear up.

Crying, Brooklyn explained that if she hadn't received any food from the Food Bank after her appointment, they wouldn't have eaten until after 5 p.m. - after her husband came home from work with food for the family.

Brooklyn and Amira left with full tummies, in addition to information on the Food Bank's Partner Agencies where her family could receive food to help them get through the on their bills. Brooklyn also hopes to go back to school and finish her medical assistant degree she had begun before Amira was born.

Despite the tough year the family has had,
Brooklyn is hopeful and grateful for the help
she has received from her family and the Food Bank.

"Thank you, because it helps. There are people out there who really are in need. Yes, we have homes and cars, but we still struggle to eat every day," Brooklyn said. "It gets better. I

How Tax Reform Affects the Food Bank

By Kathy Green, Senior Director of Advocacy and Public Policy

Tax reform is a big priority of the current administration as well as many in Congress.
Parties on both sides of the aisle agree that reform is needed, but disagree on how it should be done. Undoubtedly, changing a system that affects virtually every American is a huge undertaking.

Although the Food Bank's advocacy efforts usually focus on federal nutrition programs, we pay attention to tax reform as well. As a non-profit charitable organization, Central Texas Food Bank benefits from contributions in both food and funds that taxpayers are allowed to deduct from their federal tax returns. Many of our donors say that the tax-deductibility of their contribution to the Food Bank is important to them. Should a tax reform package pass that includes doubling the standard deduction, fewer taxpayers may itemize their returns and not claim the usual charitable deduction.

Another provision in the tax code critical to the Food Bank's mission is section 170(e)
(3) of the IRS code. This allows businesses a deduction for donating excess food to emergency feeding organizations. Without this provision being protected, there is little financial incentive for businesses to make a donation because it is often more cost effective to dump, rather than donate, excess food. Central Texas Food Bank relies heavily on food donations from our area grocers and other businesses through our Central Texas Food Rescue program. Currently, this program brings in food donations worth $39 million a year.

Tax reform could also affect Food Bank clients. Credits such as the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) and Child Tax Credit
(CTC) that support low- and moderate-income working families could see cuts. EITC and CTC are both shown to reward work and reduce poverty. In fact, the EITC has been documented as being especially effective at increasing work and wages among single mother-headed families.

While Congress attempts to make the federal tax system simpler and fairer, we will urge them to keep in mind the effects of certain changes on our Food Bank operations and our clients. We encourage you to do the same.

New Partnership Feeds Veterans

There's a new Mobile Food Pantry distribution site down the street from the Food Bank. Just like at any other site, individuals are lined up before the truck arrives. However, there's something unique about this site. Veteran hats prevail in the crowd.

A new partnership between Feeding America®, the nation's largest hunger-relief organization, and the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) brings the Veterans Pantry Pilot (VPP) program to provide food assistance to men and women who have served this country.

Nationally, 20 percent of the households supported by Feeding America have a member who is a veteran or has served in the U.S. military. An estimated 25 percent of households served by the Central Texas Food Bank report that someone in their household has served in the U.S. Armed Forces or as a member of the military Reserve or National Guard.

The program kicked off in August and more than 16,000 pounds of nutritious food have been distributed to a total of 322 households, with 283 households identifying themselves as veterans.

The onsite assistance makes it easier for veterans who are receiving care at the VA to get food before or after their appointments.

Willie, an army veteran, started having health problems after inhaling tear gas during his service in the 70s. He has to use a breathing machine every day and his health has continued to deteriorate. Now he is unable to stand for very long or do everyday tasks, like cooking a meal, without assistance from someone.

"I can't do the stuff I used to. I just take it day by day. Most of the time I'm at the VA," Willie said.

The disability benefit he receives is barely enough to cover his expenses and his SNAP assistance doesn't last the entire month.

Willie isn't the only one. Military Reserve veteran, Peter, is also on a fixed income. He relies on the Food Bank's Partner Agencies throughout the month to eat. But the new VA Mobile Food Pantry distribution makes it easier for him to get food, especially since he travels on the bus.

Though veterans are our country's heroes, some of the veterans we serve think Food Bank supporters deserve recognition as well.

"I'd like to see their names in the paper and on the news. I'd like to hear about the people who donate," Peter said. "I'd like to see their names up there, because they're the heroes... thank you very much."

For Central Texas veterans, the new VPP program means they can pick up nutritious food, such as staples and fresh produce, once a month at the VA Medical Center parking lot.

"We are so proud to be a part of this program that serves America's veterans," said Derrick Chubbs, president & CEO of the Central Texas Food Bank. "It's an honor to be able to give back to those who have given so much to this country."

Diana stands in the food assistance line quietly with her three year old son, Joshua. Volunteers from the Shepherd's Heart Food Pantry in Taylor graciously pack boxes and bags of nutritious food for her as she waits. Diana found the pantry after asking around when she and her family found themselves living on one income. "It means a lot," she says to those who care about her in her family's time of need.

Thank you. I appreciate everything you do. It means a lot to all of us here.

Diana's husband works a full time job, but the pay is not enough to support the whole family. With two children in school, as well as their three-year-old, Diana and her husband cannot afford to both work and pay for childcare. "Right now, the kids are going through growth spurts," she says. Diana feels that access to the food pantry has helped out her family so that they can put more of their modest income toward bills, clothing and other necessities.

As the weather gets colder, additional bills can make it even harder for our struggling neighbors. Your support provides food for pantries such as Shepherd's Heart so that families in need, like Diana's, have a place to go when money is tight. With more than 471,000 people in our community at risk of hunger, 35 percent of whom are children, every donation makes a significant difference in our mission to fight hunger in Central Texas.

During this season of giving, please consider offering Hope for the Holidays by donating to the Central Texas Food Bank today. Right now, your donation will go even further with our generous matching challenge provided by Beaumont Foundation and Texas Jacobson Aviation, who will match all gifts up to $200,000. For the many people in Central Texas who struggle like Diana's family, your gift will provide hope and many nourishing meals. For every $50 donation, you will be providing 400 meals for our neighbors in need. Your generosity will go even further with donations made before December 31st.

Thank you for remembering families in need across Central Texas and thank you for providing Hope for the Holidays!

MESSAGE from the PRESIDENT & CEO

The year is drawing to a close and the holidays are nearly upon us. It's a time to look back on another eventful year as we gather with family and friends to celebrate and enjoy traditions that are close to our hearts. It's also a time to be thankful for all that we have and to be mindful of those who aren't as fortunate – our neighbors who may not be in a very celebratory mood this holiday season because they don't have enough food to eat.

If you're like me, so many holiday memories revolve around the great times had over meals shared with family and friends through the years. Unfortunately, for Central Texans like Brooklyn and Amira (featured in this issue) the holidays can be a painful reminder of things they don't have, like access to regular meals for themselves and their families. After all, nobody should go hungry, especially during the holidays.

As we think about our own blessings during the coming days, let's remember our neighbors who aren't as fortunate. There are so many Central Texas families, children and seniors who won't have food on the table for the holidays without our help.

It's the season for giving. So please make the most generous gift you can to help feed our hungry neighbors. Thanks to our matching gift donors, the impact of your donation will be doubled, providing food to twice as many folks in need, helping to turn their worries about hunger into happy holiday memories.

Thank you for all you do to help us serve Central Texans in need. Your compassion gives hope for the holidays to so many who would otherwise have a very bleak season.

From all of us at the Food Bank, best wishes for a joyous holiday season!

HUNGER IN BURNET COUNTY

Hunger is a serious issue in Burnet County:

- There is a Meal Gap in Burnet County. 7,030 individuals, or 15.9 percent of residents, do not know where their next meal will come from.
- 25.7 percent of children under 18 years old, or 2,500 kids, are hungry or facing hunger.
- Of those children, 25 percent are not income-eligible for federal nutrition assistance.

The Central Texas Food Bank supplied enough food to provide 687,365 meals in Burnet County last year.

In FY 2017, the Food Bank distributed 824,838 pounds of food to Burnet County through its 9 Partner Agencies and programs.

Here's how the five largest Partner Agencies in Burnet County made a difference in FY 2017:

Joseph's Storehouse - Granite Shoals

- Served an average of 1,383 individuals each month
- Distributed 262,949 pounds of food

Helping Center Marble Falls - Marble Falls

- Served an average of 1,452 individuals each month
- Distributed 200,033 pounds of food

LaCare - Burnet

- Served an average of 1,002 individuals each month
- Distributed 151,985 pounds of food

Church of Christ Marble Falls - Marble Falls

- Served an average of 601 individuals each month
- Distributed 53,681 pounds of food

First Baptist - Marble Falls

- Served an average of 481 individuals each month
- Distributed 51,554 pounds of food

In partnership with FEEDING AMERICA

FOR EVERY $1 DONATED
THE FOOD BANK PROVIDES 4 MEALS FOR CENTRAL
TEXANS AT RISK OF HUNGER

YOUR CONTRIBUTIONS

47 percent of our food was rescued from farms, retailers, manufacturers, wholesalers and distributors. The Food Bank and its partners rescued more than 18.5 million pounds of food from 349 donors last year. More than 4.9 million pounds of that was fresh fruits and vegetables, giving us the opportunity to provide our clients more nutritious meal options.

11 percent of our food was purchased with your generous donations. Our staff is dedicated to finding the most efficient ways to turn dollars into food, giving us the ability to turn every $1 donated into $8 worth of food — the equivalent of four meals.

Community events and food drives raised 1,339,375 pounds of food that was sorted by volunteers before our partners put it into the hands of hungry Central Texans. That accounted for 3 percent of our food.

21 percent of our food came from the United States Department of Agriculture, and 18 percent came from Feeding Texas, Feeding America or other food banks.

We're always looking for ways to improve our operations, and direct Agency Retail Pick-Up allows us to rescue more food that would otherwise end up in the landfill and get it into the hands of people who need it most. Our agencies picked up more than 8 million pounds of donated food directly from retailers last year!
