The reason is that he does not have enough property and the property that he has has his sheep in, there is a water pump that feeds the water to the community and who hasn't had any 6-by with him at all before.

Regulations already state the resident does not have enough room to keep livestock - so they are not in compliance. How do we know they won't bring more animals? How can we know this will not affect the ground - there are water tanks in the adjoining yard. We give in to this resident & others will think they can too. Please NO, do not grant the variance

Regulations already state the resident does not have any square feet = 36000, compared to the 24250 (which is partially fenced) so they are 11,750 short

Will the waste they (sheep) leave cause anything we should be concerned with for the ground - we have a water tank yard right next to the residence.
we are also concerned of flies too

Will they have additional "need" to bring in more animals? These are all female
