- To make schools better, we must begin by understanding the unique challenges each school faces. This means listening to students, teachers, parents, and staff to identify the specific issues affecting their community.
- Once we understand the problems, we can explore meaningful ways to help—whether through resources, programs, or support systems tailored to their needs.
- A key area of focus is fostering open and honest conversations between adults and students about bullying.
- By creating safe spaces for dialogue, we can better understand the impact bullying has on young people and work together to develop effective strategies to prevent and address it within each school.

“I can do things
you cannot; you
can do things I cannot;
together, we can
do great things.”
