metal bit in their mouth can break their jaw, tear part of their cheek off, cut the tongue severely," Gimenez wrote in an email to TCPalm. "I am shocked that any horseman would think that is a smart thing to do. In my opinion, it is still the lazy person's way of not having to transport the saddles to the location and tack up."

Transporting fully tacked horses — meaning wearing their saddles, hanging stirrups, bits and bridles — is common in the West and among police who must deploy quickly, said Gimenez, a decorated Army and law enforcement veteran and current firefighter. But it's best to avoid it because horses can injure themselves on the equipment, including suffering back injuries from turning in a narrow space, she said.

Hayes said "everybody has their own opinion" on the dangers of taking such shortcuts.

"I've hauled horses for 40 years saddled up. It depends on the distance, and I'm just going 15 miles across town," Hayes said. "I haven't had the first accident with any of them due to being saddled."

No public records exist to verify his claim, but Tours on Horseback has been "very good partners" with the county, Gill said — informally since 1994 and formally since Hayes was the sole bidder on the premier contract in 2015.

County contract

St. Lucie County makes about $7,000 a year off Tours on Horseback's business.

The contract, which expires July 2019, requires the company to pay the county 20 percent of its gross receipts, which totaled $21,520 for 2015, 2016 and 2017.

Hayes charges $45 for a one-hour round-trip ride on the 3.2-mile stretch from Frederick Douglass to Middle Cove. His contract also allows for tours at other county preserves, including, but not limited to, Teague, Pine-land, Bluefield Ranch and Paleo Hammock.

The company "usually" provides six, but no more than eight, horses with at least 10 years of trail-riding experience, according to a business management plan included in the contract.

"They do bring 'new' horses with them to the beach for their staff to work with them to get them used to water," Gill told TCPalm when asked why 11 horses were in the trailer the day Smokey died. "But they aren't used by guests/customers — only their staff."

The company is among the many private businesses and tourist attractions listed on the St. Lucie County tourism website and featured in its marketing materials.

The county in 2017 spent $300 on 2,500 rack cards to promote beach horseback riding, which were given to Tours on Horseback to distribute in county facilities, Gill said.

No charges

Fort Pierce Animal Control, the only agency that investigated, found no violations of the city ordinance, which makes it illegal for anyone to "abandon, beat, treat with cruelty, overwork or otherwise abuse any animal," said Code Compliance Manager Peggy Arraiz.

"We did not cite the owner because the event that happened was considered an unfortunate but tragic accident," she said. "The horse was in good condition and fine health until the accident happened."

The county did not investigate because the incident occurred in the city limits, Gill said.

Police did not ticket Baumker, 35, of Fort Pierce, who had a valid driver license and was not found to have broken any laws, police spokeswoman Audria Wells said. He also wasn't required to have a commercial driver license.

Smokey, a white male thoroughbred valued at $5,000, was dead when officers arrived at the scene, according to a Fort Pierce police report.

No state agencies regulate horse trailers or require their inspection, according to the Florida Highway Patrol and state departments of Transportation; Agriculture and Consumer Services; Business and Professional Regulation; and Division of Highways and Motor Vehicles.

Without regulations, horse owners should be more — not less — vigilant about their responsibility to animals that are "domesticated and trained to do our bidding," Gimenez said.

"It is incumbent upon you — the driver, the owner, the person responsible for the maintenance of the trailer and its safety — to take it seriously and prevent these tragic situations," she said. "You had one job (from the perspective of Smokey the horse) and it was to keep me safe. You failed. That job was easily done if you had just taken the time and effort and money to check."
