Glendale Comprehensive Historic Survey Update

Resources 1946 to 1976

Project Approach

Background

Glendale, Arizona has been the subject of several historic surveys. The initial survey was by Janus Associates in 1980 and was not comprehensive. The most recent survey was completed in 1997 by a team led by Robert Graham, AIA under prior firm Alliance Architects, LLC. This survey was divided into two phases. The first phase encompassed “windshield survey” of all areas within Glendale’s corporate limits as of 1996 in order to identify all resources constructed prior to 1945 that still possessed integrity of their form. This initial phase tabulated 742 potential historic properties that had not been documented in the 1980 survey. It recommended numerous potential historic districts and individual properties worthy of preservation. The second phase was a detailed inventory of a 400-acre area from Glendale Ave. north to Orangewood and from 51st Avenue to Grand Avenue. The survey led to a series of follow-up surveys and a number of individual and district nominations to the National Register of Historic Places between 1998 and 2012. Eleven historic districts and nine individual historic buildings were successfully nominated and listed in the National Register. The above process also identified about 250 individual properties, mostly isolated resources, outside the 1950 Glendale city limits that were never revisited.

Over 20 years have passed since the city’s historic resources were re-evaluated. The historic period of the 1997 survey ended in 1947, the 50-year age criterion for National Register eligibility. Today, that horizon is 1974. Between 1950 and 1974, the corporate limits of Glendale grew from about 1-1/2 square miles to over 22 square miles. By 1976 much of that added area was developed, or in the process of being developed, with all the varied elements of suburban growth: housing tracts, strip shopping centers, apartments, trailer parks, churches, schools, and commercial properties. Along Grand Avenue, warehousing and manufacturing facilities arose. Some isolated developments also had located just outside the corporate limits or even further out in the County, in areas that are today part of Glendale. All of these sites meet the 50-year age criterion for historic eligibility, but which may possess historical significance and integrity remains an open question.

Proposed Goals of Survey Update

In broad terms, the purpose of the survey is to answer the above question. Specifically, the survey will:

1. Update the previous list of potentially historic pre-1947 properties to identify any still remaining that have not been listed, inventoried, or demolished and which should be tracked.
2. Extend the historic context information for the history of Glendale and the various themes within that context for the purposes of identifying significant events, patterns, or trends that will define potential eligibility for properties constructed between 1947 and 1976.

3. Develop a list of properties and/or districts within today's Glendale corporate limits built between 1947 and 1976 that should be investigated further and inventoried for potential future historic designation. We will endeavor to identify:
 - a. Individual buildings or campuses that relate to important events in Glendale's history under one or more themes, including Agriculture, Education, Commerce, Community Development, Religion, Transportation, Government, and Industry.
 - b. Important or notable works of architecture.
 - c. Subdivisions or districts that best represent significant trends in community development or planning or exhibit design excellence.

Approach

The available tools for accomplish a survey such as this have developed significantly since 1997. The physical survey can be accomplished entirely using online resources including historical aerial photographs available from the Flood Control District of Maricopa County; Google Streetview; Google Maps; and Maricopa County Assessor's GIS records.

Our approach will rely on a comparison of aerial photographs from 1949, 1976, and 2023 to locate buildings, structures, and subdivisions that developed between 1947 and 1976. The construction dates for these features will be determined from the Maricopa County Assessor's GIS website. Using Google Streetview, the historical integrity of identified target sites will be evaluated. Each feature thus identified will be assigned an inventory number and will be marked on a Google Map. Critical identifying information and a brief description and evaluation will be tabulated in a spreadsheet. A screen shot of the Google Streetview will be saved and indexed.

An historian will work on a separate track to research the various themes as they apply to Glendale between 1947 and 1976. Each theme will be documented in a narrative extension of the historical work done in 1997. This information will be used to help identify and evaluate the properties located in the digital survey.

Deliverables

The project results will be documented in a summary report submitted in PDF format. The report will first summarize the status of pre-1947 properties identified in 1997: listed or otherwise recognized; requiring additional evaluation; or demolished. The thematic historical narratives for 1947-76 will be presented. The report will further identify and prioritize the candidates for future research, detailed inventory, and possible historic designation. The report will include a tabulation of all properties located and inventoried and printed maps taken from the Google Map created during the inventory. The source map will remain an active online resource shared with the City.
