Judges dismiss charges against immigrants at new militarized zone

BY MORGAN LEE
Associated Press

SANTA FE, N.M. — Federal migrant judges in New Mexico have started dismissing national security charges against immigrants accused of crossing the southern U.S. border through a newly designated military zone, finding little evidence that immigrants knew about the zone.

Since late April, federal prosecutors in New Mexico and western Texas have filed indictments of criminal charges of violating national security regulations and entering restricted military property against at least 40 immigrants. They're accused of illegally entering the U.S. as well as a 60-foot strip of land recently designated as a national defense area.

The military in-passing charges have been dismissed in at least 120 cases by magistrate judges at a federal court in Las Cruces, including rulings on Friday. Companion misdemeanor charges of illegal entry into the U.S. were not dismissed.

The U.S. attorney for New Mexico says at least 100 signs have been staked in the ground near the New Mexico border that warn against entry into the newly militarized area. But Chief Magistrate Judge Gregory Wornath says, "The mere fact that some 'signs' were posted in the New Mexico National Defense Area provides no basis on which to conclude that the defendant could have seen, let alone dilute, the sign."
