More U.S. flights arriving on time

ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. airlines are doing better at staying on schedule than a year ago, but more passengers are filing complaints.

Hawaiian Airlines and Delta Air Lines topped the on-time rankings for November, which were released this past week by the U.S. Department of Transportation. United Airlines was in fourth place and Southwest Airlines was in seventh in the 13-company rankings.

Budget airlines Spirit and Frontier had the worst on-time performance and highest complaint rates.

The department said that flights on the 13 largest airlines arrived on time 83.7 percent of the time. That was up from 80.6 percent in November 2014 but down from last October's 87 percent rate.

Passengers on five domestic flights were stuck on the ground for more than three hours.

Complaints against U.S. airlines rose 56 percent from a year earlier. Still, only 989 people — a tiny percentage of passengers — bothered to file a report with the government. Complaints about foreign airlines rose 14 percent.

SkyWest, which operates regional flights for the major airlines, and Southwest had the lowest complaint rates. Spirit had the highest complaint rate by a wide margin.

More people — 1,272 — complained about Transportation Security Administration screeners than about the airlines. The Transportation Department said, however, that it was "not appropriate" to compare the figures because "thousands" of travelers complain directly to the airlines but never contact the government.
