Describe the purpose of the grant in detail to include all requirements.	In this proposal, Williamson County, Texas, seeks to enhance and expand an innovative diversion program and fully embed it within the county's day-to-day infrastructure. Called Wilco Transformative Justice, the program's goal is to divert nonviolent offenders between the ages of 17 and 24 —“emerging adults”—who have entered the criminal justice system. Piloted in 2019, this unique initiative provides an 18-month plan of individualized care and an intensive system of case management. As participants accomplish their personal development plan goals and successfully complete the program, their criminal records are completely expunged. These young people would otherwise face a pathway toward recidivism, trenchant poverty, and violence; by transforming these lives, the community is more resilient, and the county is made safer.
